Reflection

1. I was able to discover more about Roblox Incorporation, their net worth and the overall blindness the CEO had to all of the real issues within the game. I enjoyed going to the Library and finding our sources in person, it feels like a lost way of researching topics with everything being accessible online now.
2. The peer review helped my writing process greatly. I was able to gather more information from peers who have either played the game or knew about the game.
3. I am satisfied with my paper, currently I am working on adding a section on Roblox Incorporation the CEO and lawsuits on the company given by states. This information will help me solidify my thesis statement.
4. I used pathos as my rhetorical appeal. Here are two examples where I used pathos. The lack of parental supervision for minors playing this game along with the lackluster age restrictions set by Roblox has given predators the opportunity to target innocent adolescent users. The amount of strangers that are accessible to your child has increased to thousands and predators are preying all over.
5. Finding book sources in the ODU library that supported my research. Most of the books written covered the dangers of children being online and not specifically online gaming and Roblox. The easiest part of the paper was finding sources online, there has been plenty of news articles covering Roblox and lawsuits covering cases involving minors and predators through the game.

6. My abilities to cite in text has certainly improved. Feel more confident when citing books and even videos in text as well as listing them in my references.
7. I did not find any aspects unclear, the prompt is straight forward and easy to follow.
8. I feel my technical writing skills are improving weekly. The more effort I put into my work the better my skills improve and I feel like I am putting in the effort to improve.
