After reading through the sample breach letter I believe the Laissez-faire economic theory relates to the letter. This theory suggests that the government should not get involved with the economy unless it's to protect individuals' rights. In the letter the company stated they have federal authorities investigating to find out who placed the malware and hold them accountable. The second theory that relates to the letter is the Marxian economic theory. This theory states those with power can expose those without power. The criminals that placed the malware are exploiting vulnerable customers by stealing their information and using for their gain.
