I believe the first illegal thing to do online is sharing passwords, addresses, or photos of others. I understand being in a public setting and possibly being caught in the background is understandable as would be harder to identify yourself. However, someone purposely sharing personal information with intention or not is quite serious knowing once it's online it most likely can never be taken out. The second most serious thing to do is bullying and trolling, I believe social media has taken such a toll on our younger generation and created such a negative impact. The third most serious thing I believe is recording a call without consent; I simply can't comprehend why this action would ever need to be done without malicious intent. The fourth most serious thing I believe is faking your identity online. I fear this is a huge issue today with how powerful social media is and individuals should have the proper education in knowing if someone is faking their identity. The last most serious thing I believe is collecting information about people younger than 13. I think this is the most serious illegal thing to do online and those who collect information on any minor should be held accountable.
