After reading over the NICE framework, I found quite a few good areas I would love to focus my career on. I have always been interested in protecting my personal information while using the internet, so protecting and defending data would naturally be one of the areas that appeal to me the most. The other area that appeals to me would have to be operation and maintenance, as I used to have a job ensuring laptops and devices were working around my old high school. Most of the NICE framework interested me, as I regard cybersecurity not only as the career I've chosen but as a hobby. While I believe that each area on the NICE framework is necessary for most cybersecurity career fields, I find the least appeal from collecting and operating data. I find data collection and processing tedious and unappealing.
