

Trinity Watson

4/15/25

Week 13 - Journal Entry 14

The most serious online violations are: 1. Accessing child pornography, 2. Hiring a criminal, 3. Searching for information on bomb-making, 4. Collecting personal information about children under 13 without parental consent, and 5. Recording VoIP calls without consent. These are considered the most serious because they involve exploiting or endangering vulnerable individuals, facilitating criminal activities, and violating fundamental privacy rights. Accessing child pornography and collecting minor's data without permission can severely harm children. Hiring a criminal and searching for bomb-making information can enable dangerous and illegal acts. And recording private conversations without consent is a clear violation of privacy. These types of online activities cross ethical and legal boundaries, which is why I'm viewing these as the most serious violations outlined in the context.