Upon completing my 150 hours at my internship, my team has met up with the company Neptune Fury. We've had several meetings with Matt, the owner, to discuss how he wants to improve his cafe, what to do if an cyberattack happens, and what steps to take if a cyberattack ever occurs. Moreover, he gave us a tour of his cafe, and the scenery there is pleasing to my eyes. I loved how everything was decorated nicely to fit an aesthetic. Over the past few weeks, we've been gathering research and preparing our presentation to show him our findings and recommendations. This Tuesday, we have our dry run before the final presentation, and to be honest, I'm feeling pretty nervous about it. Presenting in front of people has never been something I'm completely comfortable with, but I know that with the support of my team, everything will go smoothly. We've put a lot of effort into practicing and dividing responsibilities so that everyone knows their part of the paper. I'm proud of how well we've been communicating and how much time we've dedicated to getting the project done right. There haven't been any conflicts or issues within the group; everyone is cooperative and genuinely wants to do their best. No complaints on my end. The teamwork and positive energy we share make the experience a lot more enjoyable and less stressful. Overall, this internship has been a great learning experience, and I'm excited to see how our final presentation turns out.
