

Exposing oneself to works of Spanish writers, participating in cultural activities, viewing movies and documentaries, and interacting with individuals from Hispanic origins have been instrumental in broadening my knowledge of their outlooks. These encounters have pushed me to broaden my perspectives, value diversity, and overcome preconceived notions and prejudices.

Upon reflection, I have come to understand that these experiences presented me with the opportunity to broaden my horizons and perceive the world through a different lens. To illustrate, delving into the works of writers like Gabriel Garcia Marquez and Isabel Allende has enabled me to grasp the value of narration in Hispanic culture, which manifests a profound reverence for history and customs. In parallel, taking part in cultural festivities like Jarandilla de la Vera has allowed me to acknowledge the importance of commemorating forebears and comprehending the cycle of existence and demise.
