Early on in some of these careers, starting out as a cybersecurity analyst, often an individual who just started in this role can be found working at a help desk dealing with incidents including phishing attacks and other attacks involving social engineering. In other instances, one can be working on training seminars to help raise cybersecurity awareness across a targeted group of individuals, where the topics could range from properly securing information to being wary of where you use your login information and what links you click on. Networking among different career areas is also an important component of this career area in cybersecurity as it helps one gain experience in different atmospheres where collaboration is often needed to prevent attacks.
