

Self-Actualization:

With this type of need, I would like to pursue a career in Cybersecurity. I mostly enjoy doing hands-on assignments, but I don't really know where to start looking for those kinds of jobs. I'm in between networking and programming due to its complexity, but I'm sure I'll be fine in the end.

Esteem Needs:

Being able to fully graduate is definitely a need of this kind. To finish the full four years and get my bachelor's degree would genuinely surprise me since I switched majors midway through my sophomore year and don't know exactly what I want to do afterward. Being able to know that I can program feels nice, although I only know the basics, I can still say that I can program to other people.

Belongingness and Love Needs:

I'm surprised I have friends in college, due to me being a "quiet kid" in high school. I usually text my friends beforehand to make sure when we are going to hang out, where, etc. I do wish to keep these kinds of relationships after graduation. I'm not sure about the whole being in love need because I'll probably wait til after I graduate.

Safety Needs:

I always make sure that I have my phone on me, if I lose it it's game over for me. It sounds depressing but it pretty much has everything that I own on it.

Physiological Needs:

Need air conditioning, I cannot stand hot weather. Cold weather is fine as long as I put layers of clothes on.