This article is about how there needs to be a step in changing how we define social cybersecurity. It also goes into how there shouldn't be an increase in distrust between the military and society. There is also the discussion of how information is the primary factor in future wars due to the evolution of technology. Because of the increase in information, it caused a sudden shift from physical and limited access to it to becoming digital and easily accessible from social media. But this can also allow for misinformation to be spread more easily, causing disruption and opening more vulnerabilities in society. Overall, due to the evolving nature of information being consumed, it has caused a sudden shift in both society and the government.
