

Journal VIII
Easton Jarboe
CYSE 201S

Hacking in movies is portrayed as an incomprehensible mass of numbers. The hackers are stupid in the movies; they will do things that no professional would do. They make the files seem like bigger concepts than they are. They add animations and make fake hex code. They essentially over dramatize the entire idea of code. The over dramatization of the hackers being super geniuses is prevalent as well. The accuracy is nowhere near what it is in real life. It gives a more appealing show to the viewer overall. There is little in common with either unless the show does research and applies that knowledge to the show.