

Ethan Weber

6/30/24

CYSE 368

Reflection Paper 2

This past week has been a very interesting one for my internship. I was finally able to start working, and my first day was last week. On my first day, when I got to the office, I was able to finally meet my point of contact (POC), who was the person who initially was involved with interviewing me and answering a lot of pre-start day questions. he was able to show me around and introduce me to all the people I would be working with in this department. On the second day I got to meet even more people, such as the project manager and some other managerial people in the department. Later in the week, I was able to go to another office to get my badge in order to access the systems I will be working with. Along with that, I found out in the beginning of the week that I would have the opportunity to telework every now and then, which will be nice, as if I have something that I need to handle, such as an appointment or an emergency, I would not have to take time off without pay. Everyone I have met so far have been incredibly nice, and I am extremely excited to keep working here.