

Interpretative Listening

As mentioned in a previous response, we had to do Flipgrids at the beginning of the semester. I was able to watch other students and my professor talk in Spanish, which allowed me to grasp the language even better. At times it was difficult depicting what my peers were talking about, however, I would pull up my notes and figure out what was being said. I found the Flipgrids interesting because they showed me that we are all learning at our own pace, and that is okay. These assignments, along with others have improved my interpretative listening skills and have made me a better Spanish student and speaker.
