

During the semester doing a Spanish email was much easier for me since I was writing out in Spanish instead of speaking it. For the assignment I had to write a letter to a dear friend talking about my family.

Even though the Spanish email assignment was a lot easier for me, I still made a couple of mistakes. The common mistake was adding a -a or -o at the end of a word when describing someone. Another thing that I kept doing was saying ello when it should be el. This is because I get it mixed up with ella (singular) and ellas (plural) thinking it should be the same for el and ellos. Things that were easy for me was talking about my relationship of a family member and their relationship with other family members.
