

Journal entry 13:

The speaker started off in a whole different profession. He came into IT because his company needed IT support and he figured he could do the job. After time passed he was growing in his passion for IT while still working as an accountant. Fast forward he was accepted into a big accounting firm, which led him to an opportunity to work at the first digital forensics practice in Australia and he knew it was for him. I think this shows that there is always time to find something you love doing and that it is never too late also that you do not have to stick to one career choice your entire life. Where you start is not where you may end up.
