Journal Entry 15

The speaker has a very interesting pathway into his career into a digital forensics investigator. At first he mentions how early digital forensics careers back in the day were either by luck or because you were chosen for it, which the speaker was. I find this interesting because he goes on to talk about how he was originally an accountant, and a good one at that, yet he chose to pursue digital forensics because it basically fell on his lap during his time at the accounting firm. While somewhat lucky, the speaker made the choice to pursue digital forensics, which he turned out to be in love with. Truth be told, it seems like the right place and right time scenario, but that doesn't take away from his professional skills either, as it seems to have happened to the right person as well.
