Journal Entry 14

Out of the listed internet activities that are possibly illegal, I have chosen the top 5 most serious violations in my opinion. Starting off the list, I believe that collecting information on children is the most serious violation on the list, as that information can put their safety at risk while simultaneously violating the Children's Online Protection Act, which is most definitely a crime. Secondly, recording a VoIP call without consent is very serious, as this can possibly be used to intercept sensitive data from a business or facility. Third, I believe that sharing passwords and addresses of others online is high up on the list since you can be putting someone's information or even their life at risk by sharing such personal information about them on the internet. Fourth on the list, I have bullying and trolling. Cyberbullying is a rampant issue in today's world and can lead to serious mental health issues, even including suicide. Lastly, faking your identity online. This is last on my list because of how many things this covers, yes this can mean putting a different age in order to access certain websites, this can also mean identity theft, which is a very serious offense.
