Journal Entry #7

I will add my three memes first and then explain their relation to human-centered cybersecurity.

1.

3. 1

These three memes are a good expression of human-centered cybersecurity in my opinion. In the first meme, I depicted the man as an employee who is trying to appear busy in front of his superior. This thought process kind of shows humanity in cybersecurity, just like with any profession. I think I can speak for everyone when I say that we have all done this at one point or another. Meme 2 depicts a group of IT people/hackers attempting to do something together in which I captioned it as friends trying to crack one of their own passwords. This appeals to humans' need to form bonds and collaborate, especially when doing relatively difficult tasks, not so much as cracking a password. Lastly, the third meme features an image of a woman who doesn't seem all that excited to be in a meeting. Once again, I think everyone can relate to this feeling across every profession.
