

Isaac Flores

Professor Aslan

Cybersecurity and Social Sciences

3 April 2024

Journal 14

There were several illegal acts I found to be serious in the article provided. The following are the illegal actions that I chose to be the most serious. First, collecting information about kids younger than 13 years of age is very serious. Second, faking an identity online is something that can result in a person being sued and fined large amounts of money. Third, sharing personal information of others like addresses is something that should be considered serious especially if it is not done with consent. Fourth, using someone else's internet network with consent is a serious crime. A person knowledgeable about cybercrime practices can use the victim's internet connection to steal passwords, usernames, and personal information. Fifth, recording a call without consent should be considered a serious crime. Artificial intelligence is now capable of producing an electronic voice based on real human voice to produce fake spoken words.