After reading the article “Social Cybersecurity: An Emerging National Security Requirement” published by Military Review, the professional journal of the United States Army, there was a growing concern for cyberwarfare. The use of internet for communication has drastically increased since the last world war and the amount of available information has increased as well. It is looking like the digital battle for information is going to become the new normal for psychological warfare. The control of information is really important for the people in power to remain in control and for propaganda to truly work. As the tactics of war move more towards a digital forefront the importance of cybersecurity specialist increases.

Information being the new form of warfare leads to social media being used as a platform to gain information or misinform. In the social media battlefield, the use of bots can then boost ideals in which certain parties deem important. This can also be creating a community to rally an idea against people.
