In this video Davin Teo's-digital forensics I found it very interesting. I found it very surprising how his path was not a direct shot, but it evolved through finances. This shows digital forensics isn't just about tech. It is heavily linked with human behavior. The work he did involved investigating fraud, misconduct, and property theft. This is all significant social and economic implications. This strikes me that forensics investigators need a mix of technical expertise and an understanding of law and organizational dynamics. This is an educational video that I will start thinking about when I decide on my future career.
