The five actions that interest me the most are online threats, hacking, online frauds and scams, illegal content, and violating data privacy. I do not like when people make threats online because it can cause too many problems even if it's a joke. The person threatened can feel unsafe and potentially harm himself because of it. Another action that is wrong is hacking because you could be hacking somebody's profile and that is a major violation of privacy. The action that makes buying online so worrisome is scammers. They make fake sites or profiles mimicking something online and try to get consumers to purchase them knowing they are not receiving anything. Disturbing illegal content is also a major problem because the amount of people with phones who could see this content can affect them greatly. Finally when people violate others data is extremely a betrayal of trust, now they have access to all their information with their knowledge. These are the five that stand out to me the most because of potential harm they can cause.
