When I was reading through the framework there were certain areas that were very interesting. One area that I did like a lot was Systems Authorizations because I want to pursue a career where I can help multiple organizations secure their systems so we do not have another massive virus that affects all the people connected to them. The one career that I didn't find extremely appealing was Communication security because I want to do something more hands on that can greatly affect people, and when I think about communications I think about a developer just sitting in there office and managing what everyone in their company does while also working with other companies to improve their softwares and I feel like that is something to limited that I wouldn't enjoy.
