

The passage illustrates how important moral conduct plays in both digital and real environments. It acknowledges that common illegal internet actions were common and tries to educate readers about the possible hazards. The focus on safety online points to a commitment to providing individuals with the data required to operate the online correctly. After reading the passage, the five serious violations are collecting information on children, bullying and trolling, sharing passwords, addresses, or photos of others, faking your identity, and using unofficial streaming services. I chose these violations because I believe in my eyes they are very serious and should be taken very seriously. Like collecting information on children is a very heinous crime and it violates the Children's Online Protection Act. Also faking your identity by using someone else's information without consent is fraudulent behavior, which should be taken seriously. Sharing passwords, addresses, and/or photos of others is a very serious illegal online crime that should be focused on. Many people experience this heinous crime which can put them and their families in danger. Cyberbullying is a bad crime and can cause physical and emotional harm. I believe that these five violations should be seriously taken.
