

I think the top 5 illegal things on the list would be bullying and trolling, recording a VoIP call without consent, faking your identity online, using other people's internet network, and collecting information about children. Well, I think these are all serious offenses because bullying and trolling can make someone lost self-confidence and may cause them to harm themselves. Recording a VoIP call without consent is a serious offense because you are recording potential information that shouldn't be shared. Faking your identity online is also serious because you can portray yourself to be someone or something you aren't which can get yourself in lots of trouble. Using other people's internet network can be a serious offense because you now have their IP on your device and can also do anything you want with it. Finally, collecting information about children is a serious offense because your gathering information about someone who one doesn't even know and also that's practically stalking.
