Researchers can use the information shared by former criminals to conduct cybersecurity studies by taking notes from them basically just notice how many different ways that a hacker can potentially get through a secure system. By doing this many cyber-attacks can be prevented before they can be fully accomplished. If researchers do use the information, they can save companies from going through hardships of being hacked. Overall, I think this is a great idea for the future and also for the present because I know if this is automatically started hackers will slowly decrease in attempting to hack people and businesses.