

Journal 6

With everything being digital, fake websites are growing exponentially, mimicking popular brands to steal personal data, including card information. Three examples of people making fake websites to take advantage of people are PayPal, Apple, and Netflix. PayPal fake website would send out phishing emails and prompt them to a log in page. The page looked similar to the real PayPal, this tricked people into believing it was real and gave them their information. Fake Netflix websites sent out emails stating that their accounts would be suspended because of billing issues, prompting users to submit their billing information and stealing money from their accounts. Fake Apple support websites were also created, tricking people into calling fake phone numbers and stealing their payment info.

5 Recent Examples of Fake Websites | Memcyco