

Reflection Paper 2

Another 50 hours have gone by. Here is some of a quick recap of what happened:

First and foremost, we were sent to another company to setup a remote environment by deploying virtual machines. It has nothing to do with CMMC but it was quite the experience. I, along with another peer, got to know the irritating process of Windows updates. This field of work is not for many. However, knowing how far I've gotten with computers, I say that this was as expected. Furthermore, we have compiled a system and script to make the process of setup fast and easy. However, it's not a full IT experience without facing another issue. Overall, the experience was great. We have an amazing on-site supervisor who cheered us on and paved the way for resolving issues that we face.

I met with an awesome individual, Abi. I'm not entirely sure of his full name, but I know he works as an IT consultant. I asked Abi a simple question, "What advice would you give to people who want to work in this field?" His response was to explore other fields, find the one you love, and dive deep. That made me think of my past experiences. The "me" today got to this part of my life because I love what I do and enjoy learning it. In a sense, his advice was solid. I'm almost there but I still need to dive deep.

I didn't interview Koren but during our talk, she mentioned that when presented with a great opportunity you just ought to say yes because it can be a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity. I think that she meant to think about it quickly before the opportunity is given to somebody else.
