Take fifteen minutes and find out everything you can about yourself by Googling your name. What would others learn about you?

I like to think I keep a low profile online. When looking myself up with just my name “Matt McClintock”, nothing came up for me. There were a lot of other Matt McClintock’s so to narrow it down I typed in the different social medias after my name. With that my Instagram and twitter appeared. My Instagram is private so all that can be seen is my bio which states “vb”. My twitter account also states my location and public tweets. So, with these so far one would know which city I live in and if they were to take the time and read through my tweets would know a little about my personal life. One other thing popped up which was my linkedin profile. I haven’t updated it or used it at all recently so all it shows to the public is my city and the community college I attended. So all in all within 15 minutes, someone would know my city, what college I went to, and with a little research some more information about my personal life.
