Andriy Slynchuk highlights eleven common online activities that may be illegal. For example, out of all eleven, five of the most serious unlawful activities would probably be identity theft, cyberbullying, using pirated streaming services, recording of VoIP calls without permission, and using copyrighted materials. These actions are significant because they often involve the violation of others privacy, others intellectual property rights, and personal safety. Identity theft and cyberbullying, in particular, can cause lasting harm to the victims, both physical and mental damage. Piracy and copyright infringement undermine creative industries. All of these activities are very illegal and can lead to legal consequences and can cause damage to your own reputation.
