

Journal Entry 5

1. Politics: I think politics is the makes the most sense to me. While reading the article, it was obvious to me that these people have strong beliefs that they want organizations to uphold. I think that is a worthy cause.
2. Multiple Reasons: This one is high up because it can include an amalgamation of the motives presented here. It makes the motive more complex which means this motive depends on the quality of the reasons rather than the quantity of them. For example, someone could have multiple nonsensical reasons or multiple reasonable reasons.
3. Money: Money is one of the motives that makes sense to me because it is important. Everyone needs money, and everyone needs money for different things. Even though the criminals in the article spent their money on material and frivolous things, it is still a “good” motive.
4. Recognition: With recognition, it makes more sense than the three below, but still doesn’t make that much sense. If caught, you end up doing more harm than good for your image. Not only that, because you are recognized for crimes, you put yourself in a negative light.
5. Revenge: Revenge makes the 3rd least sense to me because I could never imagine myself being so jealous or bitter over someone that I leak their private pictures. It is a very cruel thing to do, and therefore, nonsensical to me.
6. Entertainment: This one makes the least sense to me because it took a lot of work. The hacker, Tom Liner, himself even said that it was “more complex” to hack into LinkedIn’s API. If it takes a lot of work, why do it “for fun”?
7. Boredom: It’s the worst because it is so apathetic. Maybe with the 5th or 6th, there is some, albeit skewed, reasoning behind their crime. But this one does not take into account anyone’s feelings, situation, or experiences.