Week 7 Journal Entry

Me checking my emails.

Me realizing I clicked on a phishing email.

Me contacting the real company doing all the necessary precautions so they don't get my financial information.

The first image captures a relaxed, unaware state of checking emails, often the first step where vulnerabilities arise. The second shows the dawning realization of falling for a phishing scam— anxiety and regret set in as users confront their error. The third showcases the proactive approach to mitigating damage by contacting the real company and securing sensitive information. This progression reflects common human tendencies: initial complacency, followed by reactive problem-solving. For the meme, the top three moments highlight the user's shift from calm, panic, and then cautious action, offering a humorous yet insightful glimpse into everyday cybersecurity dilemmas.
