

Through the roles of the seven currently available work role categories one that stands out to myself would be the Cyberspace Intelligence role. The role caters itself more in line as to things I find interesting such as targeting selections, executing actions, Cybersecurity Legal Advice and Privacy Compliance. Personal experiences of mine in regards to privacy online have been a major benefactor in my cause of wanting to be within the field as another tech savvy individual exploited their knowledge to leverage my private information for their enjoyment. That experience haunts me as a reminder that anyone with enough information and dedication will get their hands on sensitive information online. My least favorite or not appealing to me would be Enterprise Architecture specifically. I'm opposed to many businesses due to a select few utilizing the use of a EULA that many people tend to skip over forfeiting their rights to the company unknowingly.
