

Journal Prompt from Module 5

1. Political – New generation of angry and youthful hackers join the ‘hactivism’ wave, adding to cybersecurity woes. The reason I rank this one as my number one is because it sheds light towards the end on how what companies could be hiding and why shouldn’t some systems be exposed, but ultimately, it is smart of them to support those that help find weaknesses in the systems so that way they can improve it.
2. Revenge – Revenge porn victims in Wales often feel ‘let down by the law’ as cybercrime slips through the net. This was my second because in today’s time, AI is playing a key role in numerous different aspects in life and seeing how it can be applied to cybercrime is simply off putting and unethical for people.
3. Boredom – Cyberbullying and online sexual grooming of children ‘on the increase’. This one simply talking about how children are being exposed more and more with how advanced technology is becoming could have been my number one or two but I there is a lot to consider when reading all these articles.
4. Recognition – Bradley niblock election DdoS. While it makes sense on why he would do it, he is also causing harm and probably wasn’t taught to do the right thing with his computer skills.
5. Multiple reasons – What drives hackers to a life of cybercrime? This could have been higher on my list but it all comes down to money in one way or another.
6. Entertainment – Man behind LinkedIn scraping. Collecting data is pretty big, but I just don’t see how this makes sense since all it will boil down to is sending scam emails, texts and calls. People are more aware of these things and made known about data breaches with the use of social media and what not.
7. For money – couldn’t open this article so that’s why I have it listed as my seventh choice.
