Reflection #3

As we approach the end of this Cyber Clinic internship, I have found myself feeling more invigorated and enriched with all the work I have managed to achieve with my VBSRM team as well as the incredible connections with my peers that I feel will last for a long time. Getting a chance to work with Dana Sizemore and the rest of VBSRM has been so exciting because I am experiencing what it looks like to work with companies that need help with their cybersecurity problems and it feels like I am accomplishing something that is bigger than a class project.

Going through the dry run presentation was definitely a nerve-wrecking experience for me because it was my first time presenting something to a board of professors rather than just my own classmates. Thanks to my team's hard work and preparations, we were able to present our report and visual presentation with professionalism and charisma that resulted in a great dry run. We took all the professor's feedback into consideration and we especially took the comment on adding an asset table to our presentation and reorganizing our VALOR Top 10 slide as well as the corresponding section in our report.

Overall, this whole experience has been amazing and I absolutely enjoyed every moment with everyone and especially with my VBSRM team. I am nervous, yet excited to share our final report and presentation with Dana Sizemore this week, but I know our hard work will pay off in the end and we can leave this behind knowing we did the best we could have done.
