The presentation pointed out the different titles of what it means to become a Cybersecurity Analyst. The job title had many different names, but they all surrounded around the same meaning. Human social behaviors play a part on what an individual is willing to do to be successful at entry level careers. For example, a 24/7 company may need individuals with open availability schedule to meet company demands. This would appeal to some people and some it would not. A person who is super determined and eager to get their foot in the door towards career would be more likely to accept any shift. A person who is not as focused and eager to get in the cyber field may be more willing to passed up the opportunity for a different schedule. So humans social behaviors plays a major role in how a people choses to move towards career roles.
