The use of policies within companies using bug bounties is an economically cost effective resolution to finding vulnerabilities. Following the research, it was noted that even though this method of bug bounties has been somewhat successful society doesn't know enough about the research to see a significant change to completely understand outcome. Overtime of using the bug bounties the reports of vulnerabilities decreased overtime. The hackers are getting paid to find these different vulnerabilities but with the lack of progression it hard to say that is it worth it from an economic standpoint.
