Dogs pov: they tried to hack me, but they just don't know

This relates to human system integration by showing how humans deal with this type of things. I say this because when it comes down to cybersecurity a lot of it say to do with what the people have done to get themselves in to that situation. This also shows how people are in their roles. What I mean by that is it shows how these cyber attacks can take place. It all start when the person decides put the cyber-attack out and the person fall for the bait
