Individual Motive

If I could rank the seven individual motives I would be ranked: Political, Entertainment, Recognition, For money, Multiple reasons, Boredom, Revenge. Now the question would be why did I rank the political motive first and the revenge motive last? People may select political motivations for a variety of reasons, such: Making social, economic, or environmental changes is what motivates a lot of people. Concerns like economic inequality, climate warming, and human rights may have a strong emotional hold on them. And already that's a pretty good argument to support an individual's reasoning. Revenge on the other hand- there is no vital reason for revenge in my opinion, but what my possible believing to why and individual might do such could be because: someone who feels wronged frequently feels powerful emotions such as hurt, betrayal, or rage. Seeking retribution may appear to be a means of easing mental distress or regaining control. Even though seeking revenge might bring momentary solace or fulfillment, it frequently has unfavorable effects such as continuing hostilities, psychological suffering, and a vicious cycle of reprisals.
